NEW QUESTION: 2

Which two options best describe the authorization process as it relates to network access? (Choose two.)

- A. the process of identifying the validity of a certificate, and validating specific fields in the certificate against an identity store
- B. the process of providing network access to the end user
- C. the process of validating the provided credentials
- D. applying enforcement controls, such as downloadable ACLs and VLAN assignment, to the network access session of a user

Answer: B,D

Explanation:

Policies consist mainly of rules that determine the action of the policy. You create access services to define authentication and authorization policies for requests. A global service selection policy contains rules that determine which access service processes an incoming request. You can create a standalone authorization policy for an access service, which is a standard first-match rule table. You can also create an authorization policy with an exception policy. The rules can contain any conditions and multiple results:

Authorization profile - Defines the user-defined attributes and, optionally, the downloadable ACL that the Access-Accept message should return.

Security Group Tag (SGT) - If you have installed Cisco TrustSec, the authorization rules can define which SGT to apply to the request.

- A. Use AutoML Natural Language to extract custom entities for classification
- B. Use the Cloud Natural Language API to extract custom entities for classification
- C. Build a custom model to identify the product keywords from the transcribed calls, and then run the keywords through a classification algorithm
- D. Use the AI Platform Training built-in algorithms to create a custom model

Answer: D
